INTRODUCTION

In the generation prior to World War One, figure skating in Canada was carried on under the auspices of the Amateur Skating Association of Canada. The Association was founded in 1886 and held its first official championship for both speed and fancy skating in 1888. The most prominent Canadian figure skater of the late nineteenth century and one of the strongest supporters of the Association was Louis Rubenstein (1864-1931) of Montreal. Rubenstein was Canadian champion from 1878-1889, champion of America from 1888-1891 and World Champion in 1890.

In large measure the early incentive to figure skating in Canada did not come through the Amateur Skating Association but through growth of such clubs as the Minto in Ottawa, the Earl Grey in Montreal and the Toronto S.C. in Toronto.

By the second decade of the twentieth century it had become apparent to certain people, including Rubenstein, that the aims of figure skating could best be served by the establishment of a separate organization within the old association. This led to the formation of the Figure Skating Department of the Amateur Skating Association of Canada in September 1913. Louis Rubenstein was elected chairman of the department, a position he held until his death. Initially, eight clubs were represented on the council of the department, and its first championships were held in 1914.

In the ensuing three decades, as interest in figure skating slowly increased the Department became more involved in the establishment of suitable tests and standards of judging for its developing young skaters. A sign of figure skating's growing maturity came in 1939 when the Figure Skating

Department changed its name to the Canadian Figure Skating Association (C.F.S.A.) and began to press for recognition of its independence by international bodies. By 1947 the International Skating Union recognized the C.F.S.A. as governing body of figure skating in Canada.

The two decades that followed Barbara Ann Scott's international achievements of 1947-1948 witnessed a dramatic growth in the popularity of figure skating in Canada. The Association itself increased from forty clubs in 1945 to seven hundred and seventy-five clubs by 1972-73. Over the years the many organizational problems that accompanied this growth were met and resolved by a series of very able administrators that included Melville Rogers, D.B. Cruikshanks, Charles Cumming, Norman Gregory and Hugh Glynn.

The papers were presented in 1973, 1982 and 1995 by the Canadian Figure Skating Association.

The finding aid is a file list.
