Endicott, James Gareth and Family / Wen Yiuzhang (1898-1993), Missionary, peace activist. Canada, China.

MG 30, C 130

Original, 1891-1994, 18.975 m. Microfilm, 1917-1979, 8 reels, H-1747 to H-1754.

Finding Aid No. 1474.

James Gareth Endicott was born in 1898, in Szechuan Province, China, the son of missionary parents. James and his family returned to Canada in 1910 and James served with the Canadian Artillery in World War I. Following the war he attended Victoria College, University of Toronto, from which he graduated in 1925 as an ordained minister of the Methodist (soon to be the United) Church.

In 1925, James married Mary Austin of Chatham, Ontario, and together they moved to Chungking in Szechuan, where Endicott took up a posting as a missionary with the West China Mission of the United Church. There he became unusually fluent in the Szechuan dialect and something of an authority on the teaching of English as a second language. James' speaking ability and progressive political interests also combined to make him an increasingly public figure, a trend which culminated in his being loaned by the Church to the New Life Movement of Madame Chiang Kai-shek. In 1941 James returned to Canada on furlough, where, despite growing misgivings about the reactionary nature of the Chinese Nationalist government, he lectured widely on behalf of its war effort. He returned to China in 1944.

James Endicott's progressive political activities were increasingly at odds with the non-involvement of the rest of the Christian Church, and he resigned from the West China Mission in May of 1946. In 1947 he returned to Canada to proselytize for the Chinese Revolution. This activity led to a consideration of the larger questions of international relations during the Cold War, a concern reflected in the organization of the Canadian Peace Congress in 1948. James Endicott was chair of that body from its founding until 1972, and he also occupied prominent positions in the World Council of Peace for many years. He died on 27 November 1993 in Toronto.

Provenance

Received in 1980, 1984, 1991, 1994, 1995 and 1996 from Rev. James G. Endicott, Mrs. Ella Endicott and Dr. Stephen Endicott of Toronto, Ontario.
