Parliamentary Office Subject Series - Working Files	25
Human Rights Subject Series	30

INTRODUCTION

The records in this fonds were received in five separate accessions from Gordon Fairweather's parliamentary office and the Office of the Canadian Human Rights Commissioner. The fonds therefore represents two distinct phases of Fairweather's career and this distinction has been preserved in the arrangement of the records.

Four series were discernible in the fonds: a Correspondence series, the Parliamentary office series-official files, Parliamentary office series-working files, and Human rights subject series. Although almost all files contain some correspondence, some files were originally titled as "correspondence" in the original file title and contained only correspondence. These files have been organized into one coherent series spanning both periods of Fairweather's career. The rough original order has been maintained by creating two sub-series, one based on chronological blocks of files, and the second on an alphabetical structure. As far as possible the file contents remain in the original order and different files from the same year or alphabetical group have not been combined. This results in some years, or letters, having multiple files; the rationale being that the original context of the records is undisturbed. The file titles in this series begin with the sub-series name, a hyphen and then the specific file designator.

The two parliamentary series relate to Fairweather's terms in the House of Commons and consist of alphabetical runs of subject files. The official files had been filed in a hanging file cabinet in a clear alphabetical order. In contrast the working files were far less organized and appear to contain more material of personal concern to Fairweather. The Human rights series is composed solely of records from the Office of the Human Rights Commission. These have been organized into alphabetical order by subject. Any original file titles have been preserved.

In all four series, the file title is followed in some instances by a colon which introduces a brief description of the file contents and subjects. These descriptions are not comprehensive and other material will exist in the files. In some cases large files have been refiled into a number of different folders. This division is indicated by the designation (Part A), (Part B) etc. Material of a similar nature, such as speeches and speech material, or files on the same topic, such as Anglican Church, have been cross referenced in the similar files in other series. This allows these files to be assessed in the context and period within which they were created and used, rather than within an artificial grouping.
