BIOGRAPHICAL SKETCHES

John Hume (1794-1862)

John Hume was born 14 September 1794, the son of Robert Hume and Isabella Watson of North Shields, near Newcastle-on-Tyne, Northumberland County, England. John Hume was a middling merchant or shopkeeper in North Shields for much of his life. Though he also for a time resided in Hamburg, Germany in 1820s, engaged in milling grain at other times, and was the postmaster for North Shields in the 1850s. He married first, Ellen Patterson of Howick, about 1816. She was born in 1794, the daughter of Stephen and Ann Patterson, and died sometime before 1823 after having one son, Robert, born in 1818. John Hume married his second wife, Sarah Maria Willerton, about 1825. She was born 20 May 1802, the daughter of Robert and Ann Willerton who may have also resided in Hamburg. John and Sarah Maria Hume had several children, including Eliza, Edward, Henry, John, and Maria. John Hume died in June 1862.

Robert Hume (1818-1878)

Robert Hume was born 5 March 1818, the son of John Hume and Ellen Patterson of North Shields, Northumberland County, England. He attended briefly a grammar school in Edinburgh, Scotland in the early 1830s but had taken an interest in agriculture and in 1833 he went to live with John Bolam in Belford, Northumberland to learn how to farm. After a few years of this apprenticeship, he sailed for Canada in May 1836 to explore the prospect of acquiring land and farming in North America. Hume went to the Cobourg and Port Hope area of Upper Canada and worked for a while for John Jopling as a farm labourer, but also traveled about the province and in New York state. He returned to England in March 1838 convinced that he could prosper in the New World though he was alarmed by the severity of the winters.

Seeing little prospect of establishing himself in England, he decided to return to North America. He sailed to Philadelphia in August 1845 but eventually returned to the Cobourg area in Ontario where he purchased a farm in Hamilton township in 1846. He had borrowed money from his father for the farm, a debt which weighed heavily upon their relationship while Hume established himself. In addition to farming, Hume wrote about agriculture and emigration for the popular market in Britain. Hogg's Instructor, a monthly magazine based in Edinburgh, published a series of his articles in the fall and winter of 1855 and 1856. The articles contained practical advice for prospective emigrants to Canada who intended to farm the land. Hume also participated in the local agricultural society where he presented talks on subjects like sheep husbandry and attended agricultural fairs. By the early 1860s, Hume had branched out as a wholesale grain merchant advertising, “Choice Peas, Grains, General Produce” out of Port Hope. His business correspondence shows that he carried on a brisk trade in Upper Canada and upstate New York, taking advantage of the growing network of railways and canals.

Robert Hume had married in the spring of 1846 shortly after his arrival in Upper Canada. His wife was probably Charlotte Jopling, the daughter of John Jopling of Hamilton township with whom he had boarded on his first visit to Canada. They had two surviving children: John, born in 1847, and Alice, born in 1850. Charlotte Hume died in January or February 1855 after a long illness. Hume later married her sister Alice Jopling about 1858. They had a son, Henry, born about 1860. Robert Hume died in 1878.

John Hume (1847-1921)

John Hume was born in 1847, the son of Robert Hume and Charlotte Jopling of Hamilton township, Northumberland County, Ontario. He followed in his father’s footsteps as a grain and seed merchant based in Port Hope under the name “John Hume and Son”, becoming very wealthy in this trade. Hume had married Sarah Palmer Angus on 30 August 1876 in the Baptist Jubilee Chapel in Broomhaugh. They had seven children: Edith Mary (b. 21 April 1878), Robert (b. 27 Nov 1879), Gertrude Angus (b. 14 Oct 1881), Angus (b. 8 May 1883, d. 14 May 1883), John Angus (b. 1884), and twins Margaret A. and William (b. 16 Apr 1885). The family estate on Pine Street in Port Hope was named “Pinehurst”. John Hume died 1 April 1921, bequeathing some $500,000 to his widow and four surviving children. Sarah Palmer (Angus) Hume died on 5 June 1933 in Port Hope.

Robert Hume (1879-1937)

Robert Hume was born 27 November 1879 in Port Hope, the son of John Hume and Sarah Palmer Angus. He followed in the footsteps of his father, who was a successful grain and seed merchant in Port Hope, in partnership with his brother John Angus Hume. This business took him to westward, first to Fort William, then Winnipeg and later Edmonton where he formed the Prairie Elevator Company. Robert Hume had married Mona Barclay Hogg on 11 August 1909 in Winnipeg and they had four children. After his father’s death in 1921, he returned to Port Hope to reside in the family estate “Pinehurst”. The economic depression of the 1930s damaged Robert Hume’s business operations and greatly reduced the family fortune but he resumed grain trading in Montreal. He died in Port Hope on 21 August 1937.

Mona Barclay Hogg (1885-1955)

Mona Barclay Hogg was born 23 July 1885 in Moncton, New Brunswick, the daughter of Rev. Joseph Hogg and Mary Ann Webster. She was raised in Winnipeg and developed lifelong interests in music and philately. After her father’s death, she traveled in Europe in 1907 and 1908 and apparently studied music in Dresden, Germany and Edinburgh, Scotland. She returned to Winnipeg and married Robert Hume there on 11 August 1909. They lived in Edmonton, Alberta after their marriage but moved to Port Hope after 1921. Mona and Robert Hume had four children: Mary Mona (b. 29 May 1910 in Edmonton), John Joseph (b. 4 May 1913 in Edmonton), Barbara Angus (b. 23 July 1918 in Edmonton), and Robert David (b. 4 February 1925 in Port Hope). Mona Barclay Hume died on 11 May 1955 in Montreal.

John Joseph Hume (1913-1976)

John Joseph Hume was born 4 May 1913 in Edmonton, Alberta, the son of Robert Hume and Mona Barclay Hogg. He was raised in Edmonton and Port Hope, Ontario and attended Trinity College School, a private school in the latter town. The collapse of his father's fortune in the depression of the 1930s scuttled thoughts of further education. By 1932 he was working for the Bank of Toronto in Montreal and continued in that position until the summer of 1940 when he enlisted as a private in the Victoria Rifles of Canada. He served with the Victoria Rifles in Newfoundland, British Columbia, and Nova Scotia, before transferring out of the regiment in September 1942 to go overseas for active service. After training at the Canadian Army centre at Aldershot, England between October 1942 and June 1943, he was drafted to the West Nova Scotia Regiment for service in the Mediterranean theatre. The West Nova Scotia Regiment went first to North Africa and then took part in the invasions of Sicily and Italy. Hume received a bullet wound on 13 December 1943 at the Battle of Ortona. After several months convalescence in England, he was assigned in the summer of 1944 to the army's Chief Treasury Office in London. He was promoted to corporal in 1945, returned to Canada in December of that year and was discharged from the army in January 1946.

After the war John J. Hume returned to the Bank of Toronto in Montreal but in 1948 went to Fort William (Thunder Bay) to work at a hotel and find space to pursue his dream of being a playwright. Later he moved back south and for many years worked for both the federal government and the YMCA in Ottawa.

R. David Hume (1925-1996)

Robert David Hume was born 4 February 1925 in Port Hope, the son of Robert and Mona Barclay (Hogg) Hume. He was educated at Trinity College School and McGill University. During the Second World War, he enlisted in the Royal Canadian Air Force and trained as a bomb aimer at No. 1 Initial Training School, Toronto; No. 1 Bombing and Gunnery School, Jarvis, Ontario; and No. 9 Air Observer School, St. Jean, Quebec. He went overseas to England in the last weeks of the war to serve briefly in the European theatre. After completing his education at McGill in the late 1940s, he worked for the Department of National Defence before transferring in 1965 to the National Archives of Canada. He married Mary Agnes Dewdney of Newcastle and died 15 April 1996 in Ottawa.

Rev. Joseph Hogg (1841-1906)

Joseph Hogg was born 5 February 1841, the son of Alexander Hogg and Zilpha Smith of Barrington, Nova Scotia. While teaching he continued his studies at the seminary in Truro and later attended Pine Hill Divinity College in Halifax. Following his graduation, he traveled in the United States and then went to study at New College in Edinburgh, Scotland. He traveled extensively in Europe and the holy land in 1867 before returning to Canada. He was ordained as a Presbyterian minister in 1868 and accepted a call from the Presbyterian Church in Cornwallis, Nova Scotia, remaining there until 1874. He then accepted a call from St. John's Presbyterian Church in Moncton, New Brunswick, before going in 1888 to St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church in Winnipeg, Manitoba. Rev. Joseph Hogg died 16 December 1906 in Winnipeg. He had married Mary Ann Cogswell Webster in September 1871 at Kentville, Nova Scotia. She had died in Winnipeg on 4 November 1904.

FONDS DESCRIPTION

The fonds consists of the manuscripts and photographs of the Hume family of Newcastle-on-Tyne, England and Port Hope, Ontario, and inter-married families. It documents six generations of Hume family life, from its origins in the town of North Shields in the early 1800s and the emigration of Robert Hume to Upper Canada in 1845, to his granddaughter-in-law Mona Barclay Hogg's experiences as a young woman and mother in western and central Canada, and the service of her two sons in the Second World War. It also includes manuscripts of related families like the Hogg, Jopling, and Barclay families.

SERIES DESCRIPTIONS

Robert Hume (1818-1878) Series (49 cm, 1825-1880, vols. 1-4)

The series consists of the manuscripts of Robert Hume documenting his youth in England, travels in North America from 1836 to 1838, emigration to Upper Canada in 1845, and life as a farmer and grain merchant near Cobourg and Port Hope. It includes personal diaries; his recollections and observations written for farmers and others considering emigration; short writings on subjects like agriculture and political economy; and correspondence with his father John Hume, other family members, friends, and business contacts.

Diaries sub-series (22 cm, 1834-1880, vols. 1-2)

This sub-series consists of nine separate diaries, a cash book, and a commonplace book, which document Robert Hume's life in England and Canada. In total, the diaries contain about 1,600 pages of handwritten entries dating from 1834 to 1867. Hume began keeping a diary when he was age 16 and apprenticed to a farmer to follow the vocation he had chosen for himself. The diaries are an exceptional source for understanding daily life in the 19th century and how the vagaries of political and economic events affected an ordinary person. They provide a wealth of detail about agriculture in Ontario and northern England and reveal his mixture of motivations in emigrating to British North America.

After three years of his apprenticeship which he described as among the happiest of his life, Hume embarked by ship in March 1836 for Montreal armed with letters of introduction from his friends and family to their kin and acquaintances in North America. He planned to tour Ontario, Ohio and other parts of America, to see if he could make his way in the new world, pass a winter and then return in the spring to England if he did not like the country. He described his voyage, arrival at the quarantine station at Grosse Ile, travels in Upper Canada, employment as a servant and farm labourer in the vicinity of Cobourg and Port Hope, the outbreak of the rebellion in Upper Canada in December 1837, and his return to England in 1838.

Hume returned to Ontario in late 1845 to purchase a farm in Hamilton township in the Cobourg area. Entries from December 1845 to March 1846 show him trying obtain land by purchase or rent for the coming year on favourable terms. He examined several farms in different localities and made a number of offers. The diary offers an strong sense of the land market in Upper Canada and its operation. Subsequent diaries reveal his farming experiences and his keen interest in all aspects of agriculture. Diary entries discuss the work done in the field that day, the success or failure of different varieties of grains and vegetables, the relative merits of different soils, the rotation of crops, animal husbandry, and scarcity of farm labour. But Hume also reveals his interest in political economy in discussions of the deleterious impact of the extension of the franchise to the gold standard's impact on the depreciation of land values.

Recollections and Observations sub-series (8 cm, 1855-1856, vol. 2)

Robert Hume wrote this manuscript during 1855 and 1856 in response to Susanna Moodie's Roughing it in the Bush. The Moodies had lived in Hamilton township not far from his farm prior to his arrival in 1845 so he knew intimately the area she described in her book. Hume felt that she had provided too rosy a view of life in Upper Canada, or perhaps too simplistic a portrait, and he wished to give prospective British emigrants a truer picture of what they should expect in settling in Upper Canada. The Edinburgh monthly periodical Hogg's Instructor published parts of this manuscript serially in the winter of 1855 and 1856. It appeared anonymously, attributed only to "a resident in Canada" with at least one excerpt apparently titled "Clearing out the Stumps". Hume did not finish this work and the pagination of the quarto pages is not clear after page 16. Although higher numbers appear on various pages, there is no discernible order to them and some pages appear to be fair copies of passages on other pages. As a result the first sixteen pages are filed together and subsequent pages are grouped together by subject matter or when there is an obvious order of one sentence carrying over to the next page. The manuscripts submitted to the publisher may have never returned across the Atlantic. Hume's descendant David Hume made an effort to transcribe the manuscript in the 1960s and 1970s and completed up to Hume's page 16 in a transcript which runs to over 140 handwritten pages (files 2-2 to 2-4). After that, he felt the transcription process was hopeless, so the originals must be used after that.

The manuscript is of considerable value for the study of immigration and agriculture in Ontario. It opens with a discussion of emigration generally which is followed by a description of the voyage from Britain across the ocean and up the St. Lawrence River. Hume then describes the character of the land and agriculture in Upper Canada, representative examples of farms from freshly-cleared to well-established, how social relations vary from Britain, and the relative values of land and labour. It concludes with the course of the seasons, starting with spring, how they differ from England and life on the farm in each season. Pagination becomes unreliable and then disappears in the discussion of winter. Subsequent uncollated pages include a summation of the seasons and climate; advice to those contemplating emigration; the disillusion of many emigrants; social life in Upper Canada; transportation by land and water; relative value of land, capital and labour; and character sketches of farm labourers and other local figures. A common theme in the manuscript is the advantages of emigration to Canada for the labouring classes of England, and the comparative disadvantages of emigration for the middle classes. Hume reflects frequently on the scarcity of specie and farm labour, which commanded a high wage, in Upper Canada and how quickly a middling emigrant farmer would expend his capital.

Short Writings and Ephemera sub-series (4 cm, 1852-1879, vol. 2)

This sub-series of short writings and other manuscripts created or kept by Robert Hume, including a short report on the Provincial Agricultural Fair held in Cobourg in October 1855 (a precursor of the Canadian National Exhibition); a talk on sheep husbandry that he gave to the local agricultural society; letters to the editor of English periodicals containing his remarks on Susanna Moodie's Roughing it in the Bush, the gold question and currency, and emigration to Canada; short manuscripts on Confederation, homes and habitations, homesteading, and other subjects; verse and inspirational writings; and financial and estate papers.

This sub-series consists of about 150 manuscript letters to and from Robert Hume. There are about 30 letters from the period before his emigration; 37 letters from the years 1836-1846 when he lived in both Upper Canada and England (including 20 letters of introduction); and 83 letters from the years 1849 to 1869 when he was a farmer in Hamilton township. Most of the letters were written by his father John Hume, but his grandfather, aunts, and siblings also wrote him. The correspondence is heaviest in his youth for the periods of separation from his father: while his father was engaged in trade in Hamburg, Germany; while Robert was in school in Edinburgh (1832); and while he apprenticed with a farmer (1833-1835) in Belford, England. The letters reveal the family's deep love, intense religious conviction and spirituality, and concern with maintaining its middle class status in the uncertain world of industrial England. His father frequently advised him on his career prospects and necessity of choosing and committing to a vocation.

Robert Hume's decision to emigrate to North America (or not to emigrate) looms large in the correspondence from 1836 until his father's death in 1862. In the letters, the motivation for emigration is laid bare: poor prospects at home, a father who cannot provide for his son as he wishes, and the alluring reports from others who have gone before. His father often advised him to seek his fortune in the United States but Robert remained committed to Upper Canada. John Hume also often mentioned the possibility of his own emigration to North America and the prospects for his other children. The letters are very revealing of the economic challenges and labour conditions that faced young men in England and Upper Canada, and the dilemmas of parents trying to provide for their children.

The later correspondence continues these themes, even in the 1850s Robert still had second thoughts about the wisdom of his emigration, but adds new themes including marriage and family and, in particular, the economics of farming and land ownership. Robert borrowed money from his father and invested it in Upper Canada, and his concerns about these investments are seldom far from the surface, especially as John Hume's financial position appeared to deteriorate in England. Letters from the summer and fall of 1855 also show John Hume arranging the publication of his son's manuscript on emigration and settlement in Upper Canada in Hogg's Instructor, a periodical based in Edinburgh. Correspondence in 1868 shows that Robert Hume was by then dealing in "Choice Peas, Grains, General Produce" out of Port Hope. No longer simply a farmer, he engaged in agricultural commerce across the lake with New York state and used the new railways in Ontario like the Grand Trunk to ship goods and produce. Finally, there is a small amount of financial correspondence pertaining to Henry John Doogood of London.

Hume General Family Papers Series (10 cm, 1815-1985, vols. 5-7)

This series consists of items created by or belonging to different Hume family members and preserved collectively by the family. The will and estate papers of the Port Hope grain and seed merchant John Hume (1847-1921) form the largest part of this series, showing the disposition of his $500,000 estate in the 1920s and 1930s. Land records show the family's ownership of lots 33 and 34 in concession 4 of Hamilton township from the 1840s through to the 1930s and the plan of the family home "Pinehurst" in Port Hope. There is also a few letters and postcards to John Hume and ephemera relating to Port Hope.

The earliest item in the series is the commonplace book of Ellen Patterson of Howick, England, believed to be the mother of Robert Hume (1818-1878). She died young, ca. 1818-1823, and the book holds poignant entries made after her death by her husband John Hume about her personality and character. Another early item is a proclamation proroguing the provincial parliament of Upper Canada on 6 August 1818 with the official seal of the Lieutenant-Governor. Its provenance in relation to the Hume family is uncertain. There is also early correspondence from Robert Hume (grandfather of the emigrant) to his son John Hume in Hamburg, Germany in 1826. Other items include a list of patients at Huntingdon Infirmary in Tynemouth Union and material related to Sarah Maria Hume, Henry Hume, Alice E. Hume, Margaret Hume, and Mary Galt.

Jopling Family Material Series (5 cm, 1796-1861, vol. 5)

The series holds records of the family of John and Alice (Garthorn) Jopling of Hamilton township, Northumberland County, and formerly of Durham, England. Robert Hume married their daughter Charlotte Jopling in 1846 and after her death in 1855 married her sister Alice Jopling in about 1858. The most interesting item in the series is a recipe book belonging to Sarah, Charlotte or Alice Jopling, which was originally the copy book of their mother dating from 1796, but was later used to record recipes for making jams, broths and soups, pickling vegetables, boiling different types of meat, roasting turkeys and other fowl, preparing "pigeons transmogrified", woodcocks and snipes, partridge pie, "a good common cake", Portugal cakes, little plum cakes, raspberry wine and brandy, birch wine, and other desserts and dishes, ca. 1820-1860. In addition, there is some correspondence and land records relating to John Jopling's farm in Hamilton township and letters to Charlotte Jopling and Alice Jopling.

Rev. Joseph Hogg & Family Material Series (3 cm, 1860-1964, vols. 5 and 7)

The series comprises the manuscripts of Rev. Joseph Hogg, his wife Mary Ann (or Minnie) Webster, and their family, excluding Mona Barclay Hogg. Of special note in this series are Rev. Joseph Hogg's pocket diary of his ministry in Cornwallis township, Kings County, Nova Scotia and his "book of jottings" of his travels in the Middle East and Europe in 1867 and 1868. The latter item covers his journey through Beirut, Smyrna, Constantinople, along the Danube River to Vienna, Munich and other towns in Germany, and finally Paris. There are also two letters from Anthony Barclay in 1809 and 1815 to his friend Edward Jarvis of Saint John, New Brunswick (later the Chief Justice of Prince Edward Island) with reminiscences of their time together in King's College at Windsor, Nova Scotia and comments on his legal studies in the United States. The second letter is from when Barclay was Secretary to the Commissioners charged with establishing the boundary between Maine and New Brunswick in the Bay of Fundy under Article 4 of the Treaty of Ghent (file 7-5). The Barclays apparently were related to the Hogs through the Webster family.

Mona Barclay Hogg (1885-1955) Series (81 cm, [ca. 1890s]-1955, vols. 8-11 and 21)

The series consists of the personal correspondence and memorabilia of Mona Barclay Hogg, and a small amount of material from her husband Robert Hume. The bulk of the letters are from her immediate and extended family, and they reveal the Hogg and Hume family connections which reached across the country and into Great Britain. The memorabilia reflects her personal interests in music, philately, and travel. Her papers in many ways represent the experiences of a typical middle-class woman in Canada from 1890 to 1955, from her childhood and youth through to her widowhood and death.

The sub-series consists of the correspondence of Mona Barclay Hogg (and a few letters to her husband Robert Hume) which is divided into nominal files and chronological files. The letters from her friends and family reveal much about her life as a young woman and then middle-class mother and widow in English Canada in the first half of the 20th century. Letters from her sons also tell of their experiences as children attending Trinity College School in Port Hope. Some of her correspondents are of special note, however, including Rev. Charles W. Gordon, better known as the author Ralph Connor, who had been a close friend of her father's (2 letters and a telegram) and Mary Conan Doyle, daughter of the celebrated author, whom Mona had met in 1907 in Dresden, Germany while studying music (10 letters). Her son John J. Hume was her most frequent correspondent but other regulars included Josephine (Hogg) Campbell, Dorothy (Webster) Church, Richard Craig, Mary (Hume) Galt, Francis Higginbotham, Arthur Hogg, David Hume, Robert Hume, Dorothy Kirkwood, Mary (Higginbotham) Lockard, Brian O'Grady, Grace Webster, and Siri Webster.

Her correspondence is a surprisingly valuable source for the two world wars. She received twenty letters from her brother Arthur Hogg describing his First World War service with the Scottish Horse Regiment and the Royal Flying Corps, and she kept another eleven letters from him to her sisters. Arthur Hogg describes his work in a hospital operating room in 1915 and his transfer to the Royal Flying Corps in September 1916, including his first solo flight and an attack on German aircraft. He was wounded in action in June 1917. During the Second World War, her son David Hume wrote her 33 letters while on active service from 1943 to 1945 with the Royal Canadian Air Force. They portray his training as a bomb aimer at No. 1 Initial Training School, Toronto; No. 1 Bombing and Gunnery School, Jarvis, Ontario; and No. 9 Air Observer School, St. Jean, Quebec, before going overseas in the last weeks of the European war. There are also about 20 letters from Davis Braly, 1940-1943, an American friend who served in the Victoria Rifles with John Hume and later joined the RCAF.

The correspondence from her son John J. Hume is the most voluminous in the sub-series, comprising over 300 letters that primarily document his service in the Canadian Army during the Second World War. His letters home from St. John's, Gander, Victoria, and Nanaimo give a strong flavour of the tedium of home defence duty and the soldiers' frustration for being on the margins of the war. His time in England, however, produced a deep affection for the English people which is reflected in his writing although at times he was not uncritical of English society. Face-to-face with British sentiment, his Canadian nationalism flourished and led him to identify differences between the two peoples, including, in his view, the greater racial tolerance of Canadian society. Mona Hume's pro-British sentiment frequently provoked her son to dismiss the idealism of those at home and his private school upbringing. In other letters from England, he described London in the blackout, going to the circus and shows, the Beaver Club, travels in the countryside, visiting friends and relations, and the daily routine, trials, training, and drills of camp life at Aldershot. His letters from North Africa, Sicily, and Italy, tell of the local colour and contrasts and the people he met. Hume also chided his mother for her uncritical acceptance of CBC radio news about the war in Italy. The letters home are numbered so the few missing letters can be identified and the others cross-referenced with his mother's letters to him in the John J. Hume series. In conjunction, the two sets offer both sides of a close mother-son relationship in wartime.

Memorabilia sub-series (16 cm, [ca. 1890s]-1955, vols. 11, 21)

The sub-series consists of birth and marriage certificates, Red Cross certificates, newspaper clippings, diary fragments, address and autograph books, programs, philatelic memorabilia, caricatures by Chester Young from their school in Winnipeg, souvenirs, wartime memorabilia, the words to her "Winnipeg Song", her passport, and Robert Hume and her estate and financial papers. Perhaps the most interesting item is an autograph book in which she kept the changing addresses of her sons and their friends while on active service, and included newspaper clippings and photographs related to them, like notices of awards and obituaries.

John J. Hume (1913-1976) Series (1.34 m, vols. 12-18 and 22, 1917-1971)

The series consists of the personal diaries, correspondence, and memorabilia of John J. Hume which document his life, from a privileged childhood and youth in Port Hope, Ontario, to the disruption of the Great Depression and service in the Canadian Army in the Second World War, through to his relative economic decline and difficulty adjusting to Canadian society in the post-war world.

The series consists of correspondence which is grouped into nominal and chronological files. Most of the letters to John J. Hume date from the Second World War but there are also significant groups of letters from the 1930s and the post-war period. His mother Mona Hume was his most voluminous correspondent with about 340 wartime letters, five files of letters while he was at Trinity College School (1929-1931), and three files of post-war letters that reveal Hume's delicate emotional state in 1948. His two sisters and brother and family friend Annie M. Law also wrote to him regularly during the war. Indeed, the surviving correspondence shows a vast network of family and friends who wrote to him regularly while overseas. Letters from Captain Thomas B. King, who was attached to the British Army in 1944, are of special note among those of his friends in the armed forces, especially those expressing his elation after being liberated from a prisoner-of-war camp in May 1945 and his reunion with John later that month. King also wrote to Hume from France in the fall of 1944. Moving letters from Dorothy King to Hume express her anxiety before her brother's fate was known. The chronological correspondence files, which include many letters from his friends in the armed forces, flesh out the story of the war years.

Memorabilia sub-series (14 cm, 1917-1969, vols. 15 and 22)

The series consists of memorabilia which relate primarily to the war years. The most significant item is John J. Hume's large scrapbook holding photographs, picture postcards, birthday and other greeting cards, memorabilia of the 1939 royal tour and the Victoria Rifles of Canada, pictures of ocean liners, letters, clippings, programs of events, tickets for shows, and other ephemera, covering most of his early life but especially the war years. Some of the other items include Canadian Army training notes, diary fragments, handbills, football pools, and financial records.

Diaries and Expense books sub-series (52 cm, 1939-1970, vols. 15-18)

The sub-series consists of John J. Hume's personal diaries 1940-1948 and 1968-1970, and his daily expense books 1939-1940 and 1949-1964. His diaries offer an intimate portrait of a private soldier in the Canadian Army during the Second World War. There are no diaries for the months between July 1943 and April 1944, when he served in action at the front in Sicily and Italy and then convalesced in hospital from wounds suffered 13 December 1943 at Ortona: the army forbid soldiers at the front from keeping diaries, lest they fall into the hands of the enemy. The surviving diaries offer a revealing glimpse of a sensitive and perceptive young man in the grim and bureaucratic machinery of the Canadian Army at war. The diaries begin in March 1941 with written entries through to June 1943, then resume again in May 1944 and continue on until 1948.

The 1941-1943 diaries document his service in North America with the Victoria Rifles of Canada regiment. In early 1941, they were stationed in St. John's, Newfoundland, where Hume managed the regimental stores and organized dances for the men in his spare time. The regiment moved to Gander in April 1941 to guard the vital airport and aircraft refueling site. In October 1941, they moved again to Nanaimo on Vancouver Island in British Columbia. His diary for November and December reflects the increased intensity of war preparations in the Pacific, his reaction to Pearl Harbor, anxiety over the fate of the Royal Rifles at Hong Kong, and disgust at trading in the Lee Enfield rifle—urgently needed in Britain—for the reviled Ross rifle. When the regiment moved to Halifax in August 1942, Hume left it to go overseas to England. For late 1942 and early 1943, the diary contains a detailed account of life in the large Canadian Army centre at Aldershot: the endless training, monotonous routine, friendships formed, pettiness of camp life, and trips to the surrounding countryside. The diary ends abruptly in June 1943 when he was drafted out of the Canadian Infantry Reinforcement Unit and into the West Nova Scotia Regiment bound for the Mediterranean theatre. It resumes again in May 1944 while he completed his convalescence in England. In the aftermath of D-day, his relief at being assigned to the Treasury Office in August instead of France is palpable, though tinged with shame. He expresses his emotions in October 1944 on learning that his “surest friend” Tom King is missing in action and later joy on learning that he is alive. Certain themes pervade all of the wartime diaries. His religious convictions and doubts, his desire to serve God and truth by moral conduct, his frequent loneliness and ambivalence and anxiety over friendships, and his delight on receiving news or parcels from home.

The postwar diaries are primarily of interest for revealing the impact of the war on Hume and tying his life experience into the larger picture of the Hume family in Canada. They survive for the years 1946-1948 and 1968-1970 and are supplemented for the missing years by the “skeleton” record of his daily expense books. In some ways, his experiences are representative of a war veteran returning to Canada in the mid-1940s and in mid-life in the late 1960s. These periods are often depicted as boom years but Hume struggled to adjust to post-war world, working on the margins as a bank teller in Montreal, hotel clerk in Thunder Bay, front desk clerk at the YMCA in Ottawa, and civil servant with the federal government. The diaries refer to bouts of alcoholism and depression, and discuss issues of sexuality. The later diaries show that Hume gives money away to friends, is frequently short of cash, drinks often, and has at times difficult relations with his brother and sisters. The social and economic advances of the postwar years seem in part to have passed him by, though he still enjoyed some simple pleasures, a beer after work, a movie, or reading the newspapers.

The series holds correspondence to R. David Hume from his family and friends, arranged nominally and chronologically, and memorabilia from his youth and early adult life. Most of the correspondence dates from wartime while he was training under the British Commonwealth Air Training Plan, with his most frequent correspondents being Nancy Bierwirth (12 letters), Reginald Christian (16 letters), Mary Galt (7 letters), Barbara Hume (4 letters), John J. Hume (14 letters), and his mother Mona Hume (17 letters). The memorabilia primarily relates to his boyhood interest in aviation, his service with the Royal Canadian Air Force Intelligence Unit in the 1950s, and his education at McGill University in the late 1940s.

This series consists primarily of family correspondence, including letters from her mother Mona Hume, father Robert Hume, sister Mary Galt, and brothers John J. Hume and David Hume. Indeed, the correspondence is heaviest for the years from 1936 to 1942 when she was studying at Macdonald College at McGill University and then working in Montreal, away from her Port Hope home. By the early 1940s her mother had moved to Montreal and Barbara became responsible for her home care. There are several touching family letters from November to December 1955 at the time of her mother's last illness and death. In addition to the correspondence, there is a small amount of memorabilia relating to her school, the Overseas Education League tour of Great Britain in 1936, and various theatre productions.
