3. Bernice Logan Residential School Photographs:

Photographs with attributable donors

To illustrate her self-published book The Teaching Wigwams, Bernice Logan collected photographs from over 100 individuals, mostly other people who had taught at Indian Residential Schools and some former students. Mrs Logan made copies of the photos loaned to her and returned some of the originals. The chart below indicates the number of photographs donated by specific donors, and whether the photo is a copy or an original. The National Archives holds the copyright only for the photos donated by Mrs Logan. For photographs originating with other donors, copyright is retained by those individuals unless it has expired.

4. Researcher Restrictions: Restriction on Use

Because the donor Bernice Logan did not request permission to publish photos of individuals depicted in the photographs as children, a restriction has been placed on photos which identify children by name. Researchers are asked to sign a form (obtainable from the photo archivist responsible for this collection) stating that they will not identify children by name when making any reproductions of photos in which children are identified. There are no restrictions on access.

Notes:

- The photographs appear in the order in which Mrs Bernice Logan arranged them for her self-published book The Teaching Wigwams. The original subject headings used in the book (i.e. “Students at Work”) were retained although many photos are scattered throughout the book without apparent order and sometimes only a loose connection to the subject heading.
- The page numbers the original photos are attached to do not correspond with the published book but were assigned by the archivist.
