Biographical Sketch

The period of Carol Shields' life between late 1994 and 1998 saw international recognition of her achievements. During this period, Shields was awarded the National Book Critics Circle Award (1994) and the Pulitzer Prize for Fiction (1995) both for her novel The Stone Diaries. In Britain, Shields was nominated for the Guardian Fiction Prize in 1997 and she was awarded the Orange Prize (May 1998) for her novel Larry's Party. In Canada, Carol Shields was shortlisted for the Giller Prize (1997) (for Larry's Party), shortlisted for the Stephen Leacock Award (1998) (for Larry's Party), and most recently Shields was elected to the order of Canada in July 1998. This impressive list of prizes and nominations has paralleled a rise in Shields' popularity with readers worldwide.

Carol Shields' works have been translated into 22 languages; among them Dutch, Japanese and Spanish. Her international reputation brought her to New Zealand for the International Festival of The Arts, to a Canadian Studies conference in China, and to the Netherlands and the Scandinavian countries to discuss her work. Amidst all this attention, Shields has reflected joyful surprise at her success as a 'latecomer to writing'.

Carol Shields has been widely recognized by Canadian Universities. Her honorary degrees received in this period include: an Honourary Doctor of Letters at the University of Winnipeg (June 1996), an Honourary Doctorate at the University of Ottawa (June 1995), an Honourary Doctor of Laws at Queen's University (May 1996), an honorary degree at the University of Western Ontario, an Honourary Doctor of Laws Concordia University (June 1998), a Doctor of Letters honouris causa at the University of Toronto (May 1998) and an Honourary Doctor of Letters at the University of British Columbia (Nov 1996). Her American alma mater Hanover College also awarded her an Honourary Doctor of Humane Letters (May 1996) and an Alumni Achievement award (Sept. 1996). Her many readings and lectures have brought her to the University of Victoria, Carleton University and the University College of the Caribou as they have brought her to locations like Harvard and the University in Strasbourg.

During this period Carol Shields served as the fifth Chancellor of the University of Winnipeg as well as a member of the Canada Council, and she was involved with the Writers Development Trust for part of this period. Shields' dedication and resolve toward improvement mark her interactions with committees and the university community.

While garnering international attention, Carol Shields has remained focused on the importance of family. In addition Shields has retained her regional Canadian emphasis. Her correspondence is often marked by phrases such as "With all good wishes from Manitoba" or "Greetings from snowy Winnipeg". This regional, Canadian focus and sense of place is reflected in Shields' fiction. Shields continues to reflect a sense that she values people as individuals. Time and again interviewers remark on Shields' invitation to simply chat with her and on her interest in speaking about topics that interest the interviewers and are not necessarily focused on herself. A gracious and patient letter writer to her fans, Shields has treated her correspondents with respect, thanking them for their enthusiasm for her work.

In 1997 Carol Shields published Larry's Party. With the novel she explored the meandering development of a male character who finds himself expanding from a job as a florist to a career as a garden maze designer. This novel intertwines the character's baffled sense of family connections and emotional interaction with the experience of the changes of his body through time which root and delimit his experiences. For the formal arrangement of the novel Shields uses 'self-contained' chapters: each chapter focuses on a specific time period and explains the details of the story in relation to that specific period of time. In this way, elements of the story are revisited in description and memory in other sections, but emphasizing the containment of the period. The resulting organization presents the time periods of the story boxed off and bordered by elements of memory and recall: as one reviewer commented on this arrangement, “a maze makes sense from above”<sup>1</sup>.

Shields consulted her husband and many male friends during the composition of the novel in order to fine tune the focus of the character: such consultants included fellow member of the Canada Council Tommy Banks and the novelist Jack Hodgins.

Writing my latest novel, Larry's Party, I was very aware that it's men who are now the butt of jokes. I didn't want my character to be a buffoon, so I asked some of my male friends to help me with my research by thinking deeply about what it is like to be a man. I became aware that they had never had this conversation before, something that women discuss all the time, and it was very touching how eager they were for it. An interesting revelation was just how big the hole is in what men talk about. I've learnt that men don't often ask questions: women ask questions and men supply information.<sup>2</sup>

Shields skills as a playwright have been exercised well during this period. Fashion, Power Guilt and the Charity of Families which Shields wrote with her daughter Catherine Shields premiered at the Prairie Theatre Exchange in Mar. 1995. Anniversary, co-written with David Williamson was produced by the Gas Station Theatre and Departures and Arrivals continued to be popular. Thirteen Hands was premiered at the Alumnae Theatre in Apr. 1995 and was played by the National Arts Centre and the Canadian Stage Company: earning many favourable reviews.

The popularity of Shields' work has translated into a number of adaptations: among them an adaptation of her novel Swann which was filmed by Anna Benson Gyles premiered in Oct. 1996 at the University of Winnipeg. Shields wrote a radio adaptation of Larry's Party for the C.B.C. and a screenplay for a proposed film of The Republic of Love.

Her capacities as a critic have been exercised during this period, as have her talents for essay and public speaking. Shields also devoted much attention to teaching at the University of Manitoba and helping to hone the talents of writers among her students of the Humber School.

These are interesting times for a writer. The strands of reality that enter the newest of our novels are looser, more random and discursive. More altogether seems possible. The visual media, television and film, have appropriated the old linear set-ups, leaving fiction, by default, the more interesting--to me--territory of the reflective consciousness, inside of the head where most of our lives are lived.<sup>3</sup>

Certainly Shields' wonder and attention to remarkable randomness as well as the details of human life have earned her a large, enthusiastic readership. This accession has provided a window to researchers on Shields' artistic progress during this very interesting time.

Scope and Content Notes

This second accession of Carol Shields' papers touch on many aspects of her life during this period: providing a well-rounded insight into her activities as a writer, critic, public figure, teacher, Chancellor and committee member.

This accession contains a great deal of correspondence which attests to Carol Shields' dedication to personal life and acquaintance. She continues to be in contact with family members and close friends as well as a large network of Canadian writers. Her correspondence includes a large number of congratulatory notes and letters for her professional achievements which take their place alongside the more formal correspondence of her professional life. This accession includes early letters from Carol Warner to her childhood friends Molly and Jane which provide a glimpse of the buoyancy, imagination and playfulness of Carol Shields as a young adult, as well as her early interest in writing fiction. In this accession Carol Shields has also included early letters from her daughter Anne at a time when Anne was visiting Italy during the 1980's. Among these there is a letter where Anne expresses an interest in an annunciation painting: this interest is one which is shared by the character Beth, the second wife of Larry Weller in Larry's Party.

The material in this accession deals with Shields' roles as a writer, teacher of writing, Chancellor of the University of Winnipeg and Canada Council member. A distinct series for each of the universities which Carol Shields has been involved with as well as one for the Canada Council. The Canada Council material (Series V) covers a difficult time for the Council and chronicles budgetary restraint which resulted among other things in the closing of the art bank. As Council member and writer, Carol Shields fielded letters while lobbying the reinstatement of funding for the Writers' Union of Canada from a large number of Canadian writers.

The University of Winnipeg material centers on Dr. Shields' tenure in the position of Chancellor from Oct. 1996. This material chronicles her installation to the position and the interactions and organizing of events within the University community which correspond to this role.

The University of Manitoba material is divided into two sub-series: one for correspondence and related material for her professional life teaching at the University and a second for her teaching materials relating to the University of Manitoba. The teaching material includes her teaching notes and lecture outlines, alongside examinations and student feedback for her courses.

A final special series was also created for the Humber School for Writers, where Shields was involved in teaching creative writing by correspondence: this involved critiquing the work of writers who display previous professional experience. The materials in this series provide a window on the intensely personalized level of comment and guidance which she devoted to these students. This level of detailed focus is unavailable in a large class setting and therefore can be contrasted with the teaching materials in the University of Manitoba series. The correspondence and attention to editing which she shows the participants' work provides further insight into Shields' generosity toward developing writers.

Of the manuscripts, a bulk of these are from the novel Larry's Party and are arranged to approximate the order of their creation. Researchers should be advised that this order is not infallible but by and large represents the order they assumed during un-boxing. This accession also includes numerous reviews by Shields, speeches, essays and short stories which show her remarkable output during the time she maintained her public roles.

Shields maintains a continued interest in collaboration which recalls her former work with Blanche Howard. This accession contains papers from her collaboration with two of her daughters: with Catherine on the play Fashion, Power, Guilt and the Charity of Families and with Anne on a written dialogue "Are there Martians in Jane Austen?" which considers the portrayal of men and women in Austen's work. Also included are notes and typescripts from her collaboration with David Williamson on the play Anniversary.

The translation agreements provide the researcher with an understanding of the breadth of the worldwide popularity of Shields' writing. Her patience and friendliness with Norwegian translator Ingrid Haug throughout their correspondence attest to Shields' appreciation for the amount of energy invested by other contributors.

Shields' memorabilia in this accession is diverse. Her professional memorabilia include the prestigious Pulitzer Prize for Literature Certificate and the National Book Critics Circle Award alongside the braille certificate for the 1995 TORGI award for the best talking book for the visually impaired. Again, in her memorabilia the emphasis on the professional is balanced by her emphasis on the importance of the personal. Momentos from her grandchildren take their place alongside such prestigious prizes: including momentos of the same grandchildren to whom Larry's Party was dedicated. Particularly poignant is the photo of Shields cutting the cord at her grandson Eli's birth. A diary is included from Inez Warner's honeymoon trip to England which will also recall elements of the plot of Larry's Party where Larry Weller's first wife Dorrie keeps a diary of their honeymoon in England.

Restrictions on Access and Use: Restricted Correspondence removed to Box 70: this material is closed until 25 years beyond the death of both parties. Diaries and notebooks in Box 71 are closed until 25 years after the death of Carol Shields. University and Canada Council material in boxes 19, 20, 27-32 are closed until 2023 except Box 19 f. 36 closed until 2078.
