The Family Series of the Diefenbaker papers documents the personal lives of a family whose experience, with the exception of that of John G. Diefenbaker himself, was not unlike that of many other Western Canadian families of the same generation. The future Prime Minister's father, William T. Diefenbaker, was a school teacher who in 1903 moved from Ontario to a new homestead in the Prince Albert region of the North West Territories, which two years later entered Confederation as the provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta. With him went his wife, the former Mary Bannerman, who had been the chief instigator of the move, and his two sons, John, born in 1895, and Elmer, two years younger. They were followed shortly after by William's brother (and fellow school-teacher), Edward L. Diefenbaker, who was soon teaching his nephew John in the one-room school in Halcyonia, Saskatchewan.

At the same time, William Diefenbaker was teaching Elmer at a school at Hoffnungsort. The teaching profession, however, was not well-paid, and in 1910 William Diefenbaker moved his family to Saskatoon to take a position with the Provincial Land Titles office. He retired in 1937 and died in 1945. His brother Edward died in 1960.

Both the quiet, bookish father and the proud, determined mother had a profound effect on the life of their oldest son. From William, John acquired a strong and lasting interest in politics. From his mother he inherited a strong sense of ambition and possibility; it was also her decisive intervention which kept him from foregoing his education to embark on a business career.

After graduating from the University of Saskatchewan in 1916, Diefenbaker served overseas in 1916 and 1917. On his return to Canada he studied law and began his practice in 1919 in the small Saskatchewan village of Wakaw. He moved his practice to Prince Albert in 1924. While still a young lawyer, Diefenbaker married Edna M. Brower, a teacher from Saskatoon who was to be his political helpmate during both the years of political defeat prior to 1940 and the period after he went to Ottawa as an MP. She died in 1951, and Mr. Diefenbaker remarried in 1953.

His second wife was the former Olive (Freeman) Palmer. A native of Roland, Manitoba, and the daughter of a Baptist minister, Olive spent most of her adult years in Ontario, where she was a secondary school teacher and a leader in the then-developing field of Guidance Counselling. She left a highly successful career with the provincial Department of Education on marrying John, and was beside him through the most significant years of his political life. Her position as the wife of the Prime Minister cast her in an official role of her own, with a large correspondence and frequent social responsibilities.

The marriage to Olive brought to the future Prime Minister the role of father, a dimension of family life which he had not previously experienced. Olive's daughter, Carolyn, the child of her previous marriage to Toronto lawyer Harry Palmer, married Don Weir, and John Diefenbaker became, in time, a step-grandfather.

His most constant companion in life proved to be his younger brother Elmer. Like John, Elmer attended the Saskatchewan Collegiate Institute and University of Saskatchewan. He served in the Air Force in both world wars and was at various times a teacher and a salesman. He displayed a keen interest in his brother's career and was active in Progressive Conservative Party politics at the local level. He accompanied John on the 1958 world tour, and travelled extensively in his later years. He died in 1971.

Taken together, the personal papers of these individuals represent the most extensive archival collection devoted to the family of a Canadian political figure. This comprehensiveness is the result of several fortuitous factors. J.G. Diefenbaker outlived all his relatives except for his stepdaughter and her family, and acted as the executor for the estates of his parents, his brother, and both of his wives. Moreover, he had a strong desire to preserve material relating to his personal history and that of his family. The breadth and diversity of the collection which resulted gives researchers access not only to information about the relationships which each had with J.G. Diefenbaker, but also about their own lives.

At the same time, however, the family papers were initially as unwieldy as they were inclusive. Material was stored in several locations, and had no consistent organization. File titles were vague, dates overlapped, and the contents of individual files often related to more than one family member. This being the case, the series is now organized in a manner designed to impose some order on the material and to reflect the fact that J.G. Diefenbaker is the central focus of the collection as a whole.

The series is organized, at the most basic level, in the order provided by the following hierarchical list of family members:

- John G. Diefenbaker
- William T. Diefenbaker
- Mary F. (Bannerman) Diefenbaker
- Elmer C. Diefenbaker
- Edna M. (Brower) Diefenbaker
- Olive E. (Freeman, Palmer) Diefenbaker
- Edward L. Diefenbaker
- Carolyn J. (Palmer) Weir and family
- Other relatives

Within this primary division by individuals, the papers of each family member are further arranged into the following categories (not all of which are to be found in each individual's papers):

Correspondence
Diaries and other writings
Medical
Legal and Estate
Marriage
Financial Employment
Military Service
Progressive Conservative Party
Education
Invitations
Honours and Awards
Honourary Memberships
Clippings
Press Reports
Pamphlets, Hansards and Magazines
Stationery
Genealogy
Homestead
MSS by others
Memorabilia

The Correspondence is further divided into five categories: Family, Personal, Family Illness, Family Death, and General. Family Correspondence is organized by reference to the family hierarchy, and is arranged chronologically. Incoming and outgoing correspondence have been consolidated and filed under the name of the family member highest on the list. This necessarily means that the greatest quantity of family correspondence is found under John's name. For example, Elmer's correspondence does not contain any letters he received from John, whereas John's contains all letters received from Elmer. By the same token, the Family Correspondence section of Elmer's papers contains all letters he received from those beneath him on the list.

Personal Correspondence is that with non-family members. It too is organized chronologically, except for that of Olive and John and Olive together, where volume necessitated an alphabetical arrangement.

Family Illness and Family Death correspondence consists primarily of messages of sympathy and condolence. It is found with the papers of the recipient and is arranged, together with medical and funeral records, by the name of the family member who was ill or deceased. Sympathy messages addressed directly to an ill family member are located in their Personal or General Correspondence.

General Correspondence is a category reserved for Olive Diefenbaker, and consists of the voluminous correspondence which she received as a public figure in her own right. It is arranged alphabetically by subject.

Where two or more family members were the joint writers or recipients of correspondence, such letters are treated as if they were the papers of a distinct individual and are located immediately after the papers of the correspondent who is located first in the family hierarchy. For example, any joint correspondence to which John was a party is filed in appropriate sections (for example, John and Elmer, John and Olive, etc.) immediately after John's papers, and before those of his father.

There is considerable research potential in the Family Series of the J.G. Diefenbaker Papers. The nature of John Diefenbakers' relationship with his mother is well documented, as is that with his brother. His letters to Elmer offer candid comments on issues and personalities, while the correspondence of his two wives is revealing of both the private and public sides of life with the politician and Prime Minister. The Edna (Brower) Diefenbaker material will be particularly interesting to researchers concerned to know more about this relatively unknown woman and her relationship with John Diefenbaker in the years before he became "The Chief". The papers of Olive Diefenbaker, by contrast, demonstrate much about the official role of Prime Ministerial wife, and her own life as a public figure.
