Canada - India fisheries project	"In 1992, at the Ministers' Conference in La Toja, Spain, Minister Crosbie and Minister Jakhar decided to pursue the identification of cooperation opportunities in fisheries. This vision was based on the availability of resources in Canada: skills, know-how, equipment and vessels and on the proven reserves of large quantities of unharvested fish in India. [...] In 1989 Canada was the world's 15th largest fish producer with 1.6 million tons. India was the 7th largest producer with 3.6 million tons. Most of this production involved lake fish, shrimp or squid. Although India is a giant in the world of fisheries, it is almost totally absent from harvesting deep water species."	1992-1993

Discussion paper	From the discussion paper entitled "Co-management in the multi-license inshore fishery": "The DFO's approach to co-management has been in place since 1995. It involves two principal elements which impact on the multi-license inshore sector: integrated fisheries management plans (IFMPs) and fisheries management agreements, or 'partnering.' [...] The DFO's core mandate is to rebuild damaged stocks and improve overall conservation, to achieve sustainable harvesting levels, and to promote economic viability for fishing enterprises. The locally based fisheries management projects that were examined by this project are all in line with these objectives. However inshore harvesters generally want to extend the concept of viability to include multi-license fleets and fishing communities, and they advocate a multi-species approach to conservation. Harvesters also want to expand the roles of their local and regional professional organizations in co-management."	1998

General	From a letter to the Minister of Finance: "[The CCPFH] is of the opinion that the lack of comparable capital gains tax treatment for fish harvesters represents a considerable burden to those reaching retirement age in the fishery by significantly reducing the income they would receive from the sale of their enterprise. Furthermore the current level of capital gains taxation acts as an obstacle to the inter-generational transfer of fishing enterprises by driving up the costs of acquisition."	1997-2005
